Four Scientists Honored by New Stamps

from the United States Postal Service

The third set of American Scientists stamps honors chemist Melvin Calvin, botanist Asa Gray, physicist Maria Goeppert Mayer, and biochemist Severo Ochoa. The stamps go on sale June 16.

- Melvin Calvin was the first scientist to trace in detail the process of photosynthesis and conducted pioneering research on using plants as an alternative energy source. He won the Nobel Prize in chemistry in 1961.
- Asa Gray, one of the first professional botanists in the United States, advanced the specialized field of plant geography and became the principal American advocate of evolutionary theory in the mid-nineteenth century.
- Maria Goeppert Mayer developed a theoretical model that helped explain the structure of the atomic nucleus; for this work she became the only woman other than Marie Curie to win a Nobel Prize in physics.
- Severo Ochoa, a biochemist, was the first scientist to synthesize ribonucleic acid (RNA) and competed in the race to decipher the genetic code. Ochoa won the Nobel Prize in physiology or medicine in 1959.

For each stamp in this block of four, art director Ethel Kessler collaborated with Greg Berger of Bethesda, Md., to create a collage featuring a photograph and signature of the scientist, along with items such as equations and diagrams that are associated with the scientist's research.

Variety of Items Appearing in Exchange

Vestigial Remains of a Functional Feature

by David M. Frye

Perforations originally served a purpose, easing the separation of individual stamps from a pane. Now the borders of self-adhesive stamps mimic perforations as an element of design. Their new purpose is to serve as a symbol, saying, "This is a stamp." What other treasured elements of a stamp's design could follow? The denomination once gave the value of the stamp. Now "forever" indicates the stamp's value equals the prevailing rate for the first first-class ounce.
