Finding a Path for Collecting and Research

by David M. Frye

Several years ago I attended the American Philatelic Society's Summer Seminar. Diane DeBlois and Robert Dalton Harris offered a course entitled "Cultural Projects in Postal History." Needing a topic for the research portion of the course, I selected the U.S. Post Office's 1961 issues.

Digging into those materials led me to a second research project: the Frederic Remington centennial issue of 1961 and its place in the changing uses of Remington's work in postal issues from 1893 to 2001. A third topic that sits in my to-do pile stems from 1961's 11¢ version of the Liberty Series issue featuring the Statue of Liberty and the motto, "In God We Trust." It suggests researching ap-

The 11¢ regular issue in the Liberty Series appeared on June 15, 1961. Like the other Statue of Liberty issues in the series, it included the saying, "In God We Trust." A study of appearances of religious sayings, personages, and iconography on U.S. issues is a topic worthy of study.

pearances of religion on U.S. stamps. A fourth topic focuses on the evolution of the American Artists series that began—unnamed at the time—with the 1961 Remington issue.

Where does your collection lead you to dig deeper? What paths can you follow?

New APS Web Site

APS expected its new Web site to go live around noon EST on Tuesday, Nov. 29, at the same address as the current Web site: www.stamps.org. While any Web site is a work in progress, the retooled site will provide a number of new benefits and features from day one. These includes a members-only section that includes access to the digital edition of The American Philatelist, monthly member specials, on-line exhibits and tips.
